HALF THE COST. HALF THE TIME.

The Illinois Department of Corrections built this 54-man work camp in six months for $400,000—less than half the cost and in less than half the time of a conventional building.

It is formed from modular units built and installed by Modulaire Industries. It is completely self-contained with dormitories, kitchen, dining and recreation areas and visitor center.

The facility demonstrates how Modulaire prefab systems can solve the twin problems of crowded prisons and restricted budgets.

There is no sacrifice in quality. Modulaire units comply with state and local codes, and can be customized and equipped to meet any purpose and any level of amenity including staff housing.

Modulaire modular building systems offer maximum savings in minimum security situations. Let us show you the figures. Write or call for detailed information. 744 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, CA 94111 415/433-2323.

CANTEEN®
Foodservice Professionals For More Than 50 Years

FOREWORD

More than seven million persons pass through our nation's jails each year. Jails influence the lives of more offenders than all other correctional programs and agencies combined. This awesome responsibility is shouldered predominantly by local officials and professionals who frequently operate with scarce resources.

The jail is truly the hub of the criminal justice system. It must accommodate all classes of offenders, from the minor to the most serious. Prisoners must be cared for in a safe and humane manner while maximizing public protection. Prisoners must be delivered to the courts, to the prisons or back into the community.

More than any other time in our history, attention is focused on the nation's jails. It is important that the criminal justice community, other governmental agencies and the general public be informed about the policies, practices and conditions existing in our jails. In order to collect and compile this information, a communication tool must be available to join the information user with the information provider. The American Correctional Association has helped serve this vital need by publishing the National Jail and Adult Detention Directory since its first edition in 1979. The 1983 edition is more comprehensive and has generated more participation than previous editions and, as a result, it is an accurate and valuable resource.

The efforts of the project staff and those of the numerous contributors must be applauded. Their dedication of time and energy has resulted in a product of which we may all be proud.

Now we are challenged to use this resource wisely for the advancement of professionalism in our nation's jails.

PREFACE

The American Correctional Association and its staff are dedicated to providing a variety of services to its members as well as the general public. An Association's responsibility is to know what members need to do their jobs in a professional manner. One of the services to which we lend our expertise is publications. The information provided in this directory is pertinent and necessary to those members who are responsible for our nation's jails.

Jail practices have changed considerably in the past few years; however, lasting changes in our field are not easily measured in single year increments. Crime control programs, which have a history of over 300 years in the United States and several centuries upon the European and Asian continents, have to be viewed in the context of generations. Because jails are asked to fulfill various public wishes, they are, even today, being called upon to house persons who should be handled by mental health and social service systems. Because of their assigned task, jails will always be suspect in any community.

As a society, the resolve of the electorate and policymaker is not only necessary but vital in determining what the role of the jail or detention center should be. Should we not provide humane care? Should we not provide proper supervision that will curb crime within the jail? Should we not follow professional standards? Lastly, should we not fund the programs properly? I believe all citizens and policymakers would answer "yes" to these questions if they were consistently informed of the difficulties we all face in corrections.

The American Correctional Association has published a directory of correctional institutions since 1939. The need for a directory devoted exclusively to jails was seen as a necessity and the first edition of the National Jail and Adult Detention Directory was published in 1979. A concerted effort has been made to contact every facility to provide a more complete volume for this 1983 edition.

The Association cannot assume responsibility for errors or omissions; however, every effort has been made to ensure accuracy. Every jail, each board of commissioners or supervisors, court judges, jail planners and merit system planners should have a personal copy of this valuable and useful resource document. The information is current, important, exciting and should be used often.

The best thing we can tell you about ourselves is what detention facility officials tell us about our product.

"Not only was Combined America 15%-20% lower in their bid than the nearest competitor, but they offered us security and safety features unmatched by the competition."

Sheriff H. L. "Huck" Henderson
Grand County
(Hot Sulphur Springs), Colorado

Innovative concepts in construction and security

For the ultimate in security, Combined Ameria offers state-of-the-art construction features. Their one to two-hour fire rated wall system offers all the advantages of steel. It lasts longer, is nonporous, easy to clean and maintains a Sound Transmission Class (STC) rating of 53. It is a load bearing unit and capable of variable R factor ratings.

Combined America's 1½ hour (B-label) fire rated hollow metal door is assured by extensive static load, twist and rack tests.

From design through final construction, Combined America provides full service anywhere in the country. And best of all, Combined America meets your deadline on budget with their total security package.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This directory, first published in 1978, is one of the major sources of detailed information concerning individual jails and adult detention centers in the United States. The directory lists 3,172 facilities with data provided on 2,775 entries; closed jails are also noted.

The focus of this third edition is on the recent trend toward a new look in local justice facilities. Illustrations of some of the newest and innovative architectural developments, some in use and some under construction, are presented. The cooperation of the contributors who shared these up-to-date photos and schematics is greatly appreciated.

We wish to express our gratitude to jail inspectors throughout the country who participated in the effort to present accurate data. Appreciation is extended to all the sheriffs, wardens and jail administrators who updated information and provided new data as requested.

The American Correctional Association is appreciative of the support of the advertisers whose goods and services are represented in this directory.

The Association also gratefully acknowledges the following ACA staff for their efforts in acquiring and organizing the material to produce this publication:

How to Use This Directory

Jails and adult detention centers are listed alphabetically by state, and subsequently, by county. Some larger city jails are included. An explanation of the directory format (opposite page) is listed below:

IDENTIFICATION. State represented is shown in heading. Included in this column is the official name of each facility, the address and telephone number.

ACROSS THE LINES. Name of jail administrator, title, telephone number (if different from the main facility number); name of the chief deputy.

NOTE provides further explanation of asterisk (*)

TOTAL NUMBER OF STAFF indicates staff required to operate jail only, including clerical and program staff.

FISCAL INFORMATION. Refers to FY83; all amounts rounded off to thousands.

LAST ANNUAL BUDGET denotes total of all monies used to operate jail regardless of whether local or state funds were involved.

LAST ANNUAL CAPITAL BUDGET indicates total amount of dollars actually spent in FY83 for any kind of construction or renovation.

CONSTRUCTION MONEY APPROPRIATED FOR FY84 indicates only the amount already appropriated.

PHYSICAL PLANT.

YEAR ORIGINALLY CONSTRUCTED notes actual date facility opened.

YEAR OF LAST RENOVATION generally notes last major renovation.

SECURITY indicates degree of security maintained at facility—maximum, medium, minimum or combinations.

INMATE RATED CAPACITY shows official number of inmates claimed as operating capacity.

AVERAGE DAILY POPULATION. Official numbers used for reporting purposes for FY83.

ADULT AND JUVENILE lists actual numbers of males and females.

COMPOSITION denotes the general composition by percent of the average daily population for FY83.

APPENDIX A

NEW GENERATION JAILS

by
William "Ray" Nelson
Chief, Jails Division
National Institute of Corrections
Boulder, Colorado

Despite lofty claims of advanced practices and standards compliance, there is serious doubt whether most of our nearly 500 new jails will resolve fundamental custody problems that have traditionally plagued American jails. In the United States, it is estimated that 478 local jails (of all shapes, sizes and varieties) are currently proposed or under construction, at a cost exceeding $3 billion.[1] While there is great variation in the design of these facilities, most have one thing in common: Their proponents claim the jails will be "state of the art," on the "leading edge" or "new generation." Few are inclined to claim credit for building a "past generation" jail.

This discussion attempts to clarify the evolution of various architectural and management concepts that drive construction of new jails, and to understand resulting policy implications and questions. We must question whether certain improvements in architectural and managerial approaches have created new problems or recreated old ones, regarding public policy and the professionalism of jail workers. The spectrum of recent jail construction ranges from those defeating the purposes of surveillance and supervision, to those defeating the professionalism of correctional officers.

We have classified recent jail construction into three major architectural and management categories. Because the objective of architecture is to complement purpose, or in this case to complement the institution's management orientation, a rational classification design requires that architecture and management be related. At the risk of oversimplification, we have identified three currently employed categories of jail design and complementary management styles:

1. Linear/Intermittent Surveillance
2. Podular/Remote Surveillance
3. Podular/Direct Supervision

While all new jails have their own unique characteristics, and were not designed according to our simple classification system, this system is nonetheless a useful means of organizing observations and conveying a general concept.

Not-So-Glorious Past

The most common category is what we refer to as the linear/intermittent surveillance model, a design patterned after the jails of our not-so-glorious past. The design is generally rectangular, with corridors leading to either single- or multiple-occupancy cells arranged at right angles to the corridor. With notable exceptions, most of our 18th and 19th century institutions were of the linear/intermittent surveillance type.

The management of a linear jail is oriented toward intermittent surveillance and supervision. Because jail officers cannot see around corners, they must patrol to see into cells or housing areas. When in a position to observe one cell, they are seldom able to observe others; so, while inmates are not being observed they are essentially unsupervised.

Critical Variables

The critical variables determining the severity of problems associated with the linear/intermittent surveillance style are patrol frequency and thoroughness, and the aggressiveness of inmates in multiple-occupancy cells. Once a problem is detected, help usually must be summoned to resolve it. The interval between patrols is a management variable not easily controlled, given the exigencies of the jail setting and inmates' influence on patrol frequency.

In a linear/intermittent jail, inmates have the intervals between patrols to make escape preparations, fashion weapons, assault others, etc. Because destruction of fixtures and furnishings also occurs with regularity during unsupervised intervals, it is necessary to install expensive vandal-proof housing materials.

In our second category, the podular/remote surveillance[2] model, inmate housing areas are divided into manageable size units, or pods. In typical units, single-occupancy cells are clustered around a common area and a secure control booth from which an officer observes inmate activity.

Reactive Management Style

The size considered manageable varies with the user's definition, as well as constraints imposed by the size of the total population and separation requirements. In practice unit size rarely exceeds 50 beds and generally is further divided into subsections of 12 or 16, to facilitate the ability to control negative inmate behavior.

The podular/remote surveillance design facilitates a reactive management style; it is organized to react to inmate management problems rather than to prevent them. From secure observation booths, the staff has minimal contact with inmates; they are only in a position to summon help to react to inmate misconduct within a pod.

Anticipated negative behavior is further controlled by security doors, electronically closed and locked from the secure control booth. Cells are also equipped with vandal-proof cast aluminum toilets and bowls, steel or concrete beds, and security hardware and furnishings. The principal strategies for inmate control are a reliance on limited staff contact, technological restraints and responding to negative behavior only after it has occurred.

Significant Improvement

In many cases, the podular/remote model is reported as a significant improvement over the linear/intermittent surveillance model. It has become popular with employee unions because the staff is removed from inmate contact, and assaults on staff and inmates have been reduced. In view of these benefits, the podular/remote surveillance model is rapidly gaining popularity, and should overtake the linear/intermittent surveillance model in future facility construction.

The third architectural/management category is the podular/direct supervision model, introduced in 1974 by the Federal Prison System's (FPS) Metropolitan Correctional Centers (MCC). In 1969, the Federal Prison System was directed to develop prototype detention facilities as models for local communities, to fill the void of replicable detention facilities that existed at that time. While the FPS had extensive experience operating institutions for sentenced offenders, its experience with detention facilities was limited. Therefore, the FPS launched an extensive planning effort seeking to incorporate the thinking of experts in local jail management. The resulting architectural programs were strongly influenced by the "functional unit management concept," which had recently been developed in FPS institutions.[3]

Proactive Control

The management orientation of the resulting podular/direct supervision category is considered to be proactive—it is organized to prevent negative inmate behavior before it occurs. The podular/direct model relies on the staff's ability to supervise rather than on structural barriers or technological devices. Structure and technology are employed indirectly to facilitate staff efforts to control the population.

In the podular/direct model each unit is staffed by one officer in direct control of 40 to 50 inmates. It is the officer's responsibility to control inmate behavior in the unit, minimizing negative behavior and reducing tension. In this model, the role of the management team is to structure the environmental forces so that correctional officers will be successful in proactive control.

Effectively Managing Behavior

Specific principles and dynamics for managing the podular/direct supervision model have been identified which, when applied, consistently elicit a desired inmate response. Application of these principles has satisfactorily confirmed that correctional workers can effectively manage inmate behavior, thus neutralizing traditional problems of the American jail.[4]

In the eight years that MCCs have been in operation, we have learned a great deal about shaping environmental forces and structuring officers' influence on inmates to effectively prevent most common negative behaviors. There have been few, if any, murders, sexual assaults or aggravated assaults. Suicides, contraband weapons, disturbances, escapes, vandalism and graffiti are rare. Managers are pleased with their facilities' manageability, and the staff perceives the environment as safe, clean and challenging.

Because housing units are equipped with commercial grade fixtures and furnishings rather than costly indestructible security equipment, the podular/direct supervision facilities are less expensive to build. The cost of maintaining these institutions is also minimized because destructive inmate behavior is effectively controlled. Staffing ratios are reasonable, with a direct supervision ratio of 1 to 48.

Positive Results

The podular/direct supervision model has not been widely replicated; the Contra Costa County Jail in California is the only operating county jail constructed according to this concept. Opened in January 1981, it has experienced many of the positive results experienced at the MCCs. The Contra Costa County experience demonstrates that the podular/direct supervision concept can be effectively applied to county jail populations. As a result, several county jails planned or under construction are adhering to the podular direct concept.

While significant benefits have resulted from the podular/direct concept, other concepts may also achieve some similar benefits. However, there are public policy and professional policy issues that transcend the operational benefits and are critical to the strategic dimensions of current jail planning.

For example, as a matter of public policy, does a community want a jail that is people-oriented or technology-oriented? And from a legal point of view, will the jail accommodate the "evolving standards which mark the progress of a maturing society," as prescribed by the Supreme Court? Will the new jail be an appropriate place for confinement of local citizens charged with a crime?

Improving Society

As professional correctional workers, we have an obligation to create correctional environments that will improve our society, or at least do it no harm. Given the "state of the art" in corrections, "doing no harm" is a respectable accomplishment. While corrections has not been particularly effective in reducing criminal behavior of persons committed to its care, it does not necessarily follow that the "state of the art" will not improve. Certainly the environment in which inmates find themselves determines, to a significant extent, the probability for change from offending to non-offending behavior.

It is important for today's correctional professionals involved in institution design, to develop facilities that will accommodate advanced correctional practices anticipated in the 21st century. New institutions should be places where the efforts of our successors will have an opportunity to bear fruit. At the least, new institutions should be compatible with the knowledge we have gained about human behavior in the 20th century.

Untapped Resource

The correctional officer's role in our future institutions is a critical issue. The trend toward isolating the officer from the inmate is incompatible with professionalization of the position. If we are to be successful in professionalizing our correctional officer positions, we must structure duties and responsibilities so that they are truly professional in content. In too many situations the correctional officer remains a great untapped resource for effectively controlling and influencing the behavior of jail and prison populations.

The podular/direct supervision management orientation provides for maximum use of one of our most valuable resources, the correctional officer. Is it not better for us to direct our efforts toward developing this important resource than forsake it in favor of technological barriers and devices? We cannot afford the technology that we are becoming dependent upon, particularly if the resultant environment does not alleviate fear nor allow for change.

The barrier-free, podular/direct supervision architectural/management design provides a safe correctional environment that is compatible both with current knowledge of human behavior and with national standards. It creates an environment in which the evolving standards of correctional practice can flourish. As we approach Orwell's proverbial "1984," we as a profession should strive to avoid Orwell's prophesies. We should advocate the control of jails through humane, people-oriented, architectural/management strategies.

2. The term "podular" is coined to avoid the confusion associated with the term "modular." While the two terms can sometimes be used interchangeably, the term "modular" is also frequently used to refer to prefabricated structures.

3. The functional unit concept was developed by the Federal Prison System in the late 1960s as a management strategy for dividing institutions into smaller components to facilitate more individualized inmate treatment. The ideal unit consisted of 50 inmates in separate housing units staffed with a unit manager, a case manager, two counselors and correctional officers. See Robert B. Levinson and Roy E. Gerard, "Functional Units: A Different Correctional Approach," Federal Probation (December 1973).

A Selected Bibliography of Books, Reports, and Studies of the American Jail

The American jail has long been the most neglected component of the American criminal justice system. This is reflected in the relative scarcity of studies focusing specifically on local detention facilities. However, recent years have brought an increase in attention to jails, with special emphasis on areas such as jail standards implementation, facilities up-grading, reduction of overcrowding, and the removal of juvenile and status offenders from local lock-ups. This renewed interest in the local jail is reflected in an increase in jail-related symposia, books, reports, and papers during the past several years.

THE
AMERICAN CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION

AMERICAN CORRECTIONAL ASSOCIATION

Code of Ethics

PREAMBLE

The American Correctional Association expects of its members unfailing honesty, respect for the dignity and individuality of human beings, and a commitment to professional and compassionate service. To this end we subscribe to the following principles.

RELATIONSHIPS WITH CLIENTS/ COLLEAGUES/OTHER PROFESSIONS/ THE PUBLIC

Members will respect and protect the civil and legal rights of all clients.

Members will serve each case with appropriate concern for the client's welfare and with no purpose of personal gain.

Relationships with colleagues will be of such character to promote mutual respect within the profession and improvement of its quality of service.

Statements critical of colleagues or their agencies will be made only as these are verifiable and constructive in purpose.

Members will respect the importance of all elements of the criminal justice system and cultivate a professional cooperation with each segment.

Subject to the client's rights of privacy, members will respect the public's right to know, and will share information with the public with openness and candor.

Members will respect and protect the right of the public to be safeguarded from criminal activity.

PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT/PRACTICES

No member will use his or her official position to secure special privileges or advantages.

No member, while acting in an official capacity, will allow personal interest to impair objectivity in the performance of duty.

No member will use his or her official position to promote any partisan political purposes.

No member will accept any gift or favor of such nature to imply an obligation that is inconsistent with the free and objective exercise of professional responsibilities.

In any public statement members will clearly distinguish between those that are personal views and those that are statements and positions on behalf of an agency.

Members will be diligent in their responsibility to record and make available for review any and all case information which could contribute to sound decisions affecting a client or the public safety.

Each member will report without reservation any corrupt or unethical behavior which could affect either a client or the integrity of the organization.

Members will not discriminate against any client, employee or prospective employee on the basis of race, sex, creed or national origin.

Members will maintain the integrity of private information; they will neither seek personal data beyond that needed to perform their responsibilities, nor reveal case information to anyone not having proper professional use for such.

Any member who is responsible for agency personnel actions will make all appointments, promotions or dismissals only on the basis of merit and not in furtherance of partisan political interests.

CORRECTIONAL OFFICER CORRESPONDENCE COURSE

The Correctional Officer Correspondence Course, developed under the auspices of the National Institute of Corrections, is the most up-to-date training program available for correctional officers.

The need for a comprehensive training program and the current lack of training resources makes this 4-volume package ideal for today's correctional management.

The officer is the most influential correctional employee in an inmate's life. Properly trained officers are the key to smooth operation of correctional facilities.

This self-instructional correspondence course provides basic instruction, in accordance with ACA standards, for every correctional officer. The course will help your officers to:

- Understand and prepare for emergency situations
- Maintain efficiency, versatility and economy of operations
- Improve working conditions and encourage dignity and pride in employment
- Develop ease in handling assignments, reduce errors and improve job relations

The Correctional Officer Correspondence Course is a self-instructional training program for correctional officers. After completion of each book the new officer will be given a comprehensive examination. An overall score of 80% or better must be attained to achieve certification.

ANOTHER APPROACH TO TRAINING

In reading literature about the state of American jails (and this directory is no exception), one is constantly reminded that an increase in the quantity and quality of training for those working in jails is one of the most important prerequisites for upgrading our jails.

One approach to this primary objective is to establish federal, state and local training programs to provide instruction to as many correctional employees as possible. Another approach to improved and widespread training is to educate the currently numerous in-house trainers, who in turn can put their increased expertise to work training others within their own facility.

The second approach is the underlying principle of the Program Development Workshops currently available from the American Correctional Association. Designed for those involved in various correctional training activities, the complete experience based training program provides trainers with the ability to design, develop and implement validated instructional programs suited to the individual needs of each facility.

During each three-day workshop, many training formats are demonstrated including, among others, self-instructional workbooks, gaming and simulation exercises, participant developed products, peer critique and group discussions. "Hands on" involvement of the trainer/trainees during the workshops is emphasized.

The American Correctional Association conducts regional training programs in a variety of content areas pertinent to more efficient and effective jail operations. Topics for the coming year include:

- Early Warning Systems to Prevent Disturbances
- Fire Safety
- Using Correctional Standards for Institutional Managers
- Suicide Prevention
- Managing Stress in Corrections
- Training for Trainers
- Dealing with Mentally Ill Offenders

The Association also conducts on-site training programs at a greatly reduced rate. On-site programs are available in the above mentioned areas as well as Report Writing, Management and Supervisory Training and Communications Skills.
